

The social lab is a gathering place which encourage community interactions. Robust social structure is a key way to resiliency. The space also acts a preparing tool for natural disasters, by providing workshop and sharing knowledge. Depending on the location of the labs they can be utilized as a hub in an emergence situation. The use of temporary shipping containers make this project to be an experiment for future permanent MT.Baker community center. The affordability and adaptability of those structures allows the community member to shape those spaces based on their need. Those containers facades acts as a canvas for MT.Baker art community.
